

Southeast: Most of the clothing worn was made of deer and bison hide. Mostly agricultural (farmed), made items from wood (Canoes and other household items). Thatched summer homes and cone shaped winter homes. Ate corn, beans, squash, and berries and deer, elk, and black bear. Fished for oysters, clams, and mussels Northeast: They planted corn, squash, beans, and pumpkins. Lived in longhouses, wigwams, and wickiups. Poles were made of bark, tied with reeds, wollen mats, fires in the center for warmth. Elk, deer, and turkeys. Lived in clans that had animal names, bands, and villages.

The Great Basin (Bassin): They ate deer, elk, and mountain sheep. Lived in desert region from the rocky mountains to the sierra nevada. Winter wore rabbit skin robes for warmth, and in the summer wore little to no clothing. In the summer they had small brush windbreaks and in the winter they made wickiups covered in bark, brush, grass or reed mats.

Northwest Coast: settle near parts of washington, california, oregon, Alaska, and Canada. Ate seals, whales, and dolphins. Hunters and gatherers. Hunted elk and bear, Woman collected voles, roots, and berries. Fishing equipment was vine nets. Robe in winter, and woman wore skirts and men wore ornamental attire. Made large wood houses and made smaller ones in the south. Built villages near rivers and the sea.

California: They fished for oysters, clams, and shellfish. Acorns, deer, elk and antelope. Houses made out of brush (summer) or mats of tuel (winter). For hunting and fishing they used snares and traps. Built villages that they lived in year round and their houses were domed or cone shaped. They shared traditions with the Southwest Indians along the Colorado river. Wore ponchos, relied heavily on plants, and made different types of boats for different bodies of water.

The Plateau: Traditionally lived in the Rocky Mountains and the Cascade region. Relied on wild food. Men fished for food. Wore bark aprons and ponchos. Lived in permanent houses, and they were moveable. Village had a 100-1,000 people. Men wrapped fur around their legs and women wore leggings. Used bows, arrows, and sometimes spears.

The Great Plains: They hunted buffalo and lived in Teepees. They grew corn, beans, and squash and sunflowers. Wore buffalo hides. They spoke languages similar to the Alaskan Native Tribes. Lived in villages on the Missouri River. Used buffalo and other animals for tools. Horns were carved into spoons. A house would fit 3 families. Collected wild plants like turnips and berries. In winter the men wore buffalo hides with scenes of battles they fought.

The Southwest: they were farmers and carved their houses into stone. Planted corn, beans, and squash. Wore leather. Plain women made clothes from hides of buffalo. Lived in Apartment houses. Women made pottery and each family has different styles. Hunted deer, elk, beavers, otters, turkeys, and squirrels. Men made leather goods, and weapons.